What do I want to learn and understand better?

Just like last week I still want to get better at react, I want to get a better working flow. This week I've started to understand it but I still have to google most things. It would be nice to become more self going. I guess just by coding and doing, eventually it will come more natural.

How can I help someone else, or the entire team, to learn something new?

As I mentioned last week I believe I can help with design perspectives. I also think I can help out with coding, since react is new to all of us, we learn from eachother all the time.

What is my contribution towards the team's use of Scrum?

This week we've started with daily scrums, which I believe will give our group some structure and help us reflect better. My group finished a user story and we've taken on a new for next week.

What is my contribution towards the team's deliveries?

Together with my group I've made a confirmation box, which tells which items has been purchased. It was the first thing we coded, and all though it took some time, and we struggle a little bit sometimes I think it went really smooth. I've also help with the team-reflection.
